

Practical approaches to working in partnership

Practical examples of partnerships with adult social care providers

Working with partners self-assessment webinar

Rotary Club / Chamber of Commerce	Partnerships with Rotary Clubs and Chambers of Commerce can be a valuable resource for employers. These organisations often have a wide network of contacts and can provide access to a range of skills and expertise. They can also provide support and advice on a range of issues, including recruitment, training and development.
Local shops	Partnerships with local shops can be a valuable resource for employers. These organisations often have a wide network of contacts and can provide access to a range of skills and expertise. They can also provide support and advice on a range of issues, including recruitment, training and development.
Hotels	Partnerships with hotels can be a valuable resource for employers. These organisations often have a wide network of contacts and can provide access to a range of skills and expertise. They can also provide support and advice on a range of issues, including recruitment, training and development.
Leisure facility	Partnerships with leisure facilities can be a valuable resource for employers. These organisations often have a wide network of contacts and can provide access to a range of skills and expertise. They can also provide support and advice on a range of issues, including recruitment, training and development.
Local sporting groups, teams and gyms	Partnerships with local sporting groups, teams and gyms can be a valuable resource for employers. These organisations often have a wide network of contacts and can provide access to a range of skills and expertise. They can also provide support and advice on a range of issues, including recruitment, training and development.
Activity providers	Partnerships with activity providers can be a valuable resource for employers. These organisations often have a wide network of contacts and can provide access to a range of skills and expertise. They can also provide support and advice on a range of issues, including recruitment, training and development.
Learning providers	Partnerships with learning providers can be a valuable resource for employers. These organisations often have a wide network of contacts and can provide access to a range of skills and expertise. They can also provide support and advice on a range of issues, including recruitment, training and development.

Further information and advice about Practical approaches to working in partnership is available from

www.skillsforcare.org.uk/COVID-19webinars